March 28th: Introduction to Foodscapes and Permaculture Design - Foodscaping blends growing food with artistic design, allowing food plants to escape from the limitations of a garden or farm and join all areas of the yard. Permaculture design offers an ecological understanding of our human habitats, realizing the need for our urban, suburban, and rural places to support and promote all forms of life. Permaculture encompasses all areas of sustainability, including growing food, building construction, waste management, energy use, and community. In this workshop, we explore the philosophy behind foodscaping and permaculture design and discuss the multi-faceted solutions to creating a healthier culture and human habitat. Cost of this workshop is $25 (no one will be turned away for lack of financial resources). The class will run from 10-2. Please bring a lunch.

March 29th: A Journey Through the Permaculture Design Process - In this workshop, we explore and work through the Permaculture design process. From goals articulation and mapping methods to principles application, participants work with multiple property types to gain experience designing various landscapes containing a diversity of challenges. This workshop offers people already familiar with Permaculture design an opportunity and confidence in applying the design process to their urban, suburban, or rural homesteads. It is recommended that participants in this workshop either have familiarity with Permaculture design, or take the Introduction class on March 28th. Cost of this workshop is $50. The class will run from 10-5. Please bring a lunch.
